FUL USE QUICKLY LEARNED.

The Electropoise is an Instrument for the
CURE OF DISEASE
WITHOUT MEDICINE.

BASED on new theories of the cause and cure of disease, it deals with the electrical and magnetic conditions of the body and the gases surrounding it in the atmosphere, controlling these conditions at will. It is not electricity. DISEASE is simply impaired vitality. The Electropoise constantly adds to the vitality and only acts as nature, in nature's way, to throw off the trouble.

The Yokohama Tragedy.

A dispatch from San Francisco says:
Dr. North, surgeon of the Monocacy, who knew the Hetheringtons well, explains the singular conduct of the Lieutenant's wife by the assertion that the woman was vain, fond of admiration and had no common sense. He said:

"On the voyage from San Francisco to China she caused much gossip by her flirtations, and when she reached Yokohama she at once set tongues wagging by her indiscriminate conduct. She was easily the prettiest woman in the foreign colony at Yokohama, but these who knew her best said she had no heart and flirted merely for amusement, and the sequel proved that they were correct."

"From the first day of her stay in the Grand Hotel she seemed to lay herself out to fascinate Yokohama. She would glance about the different tables at dinner time, selecting the men and smiling with a self-consciousness that amused most of the men whom she made her target. As dinner and balls she would flirt separately, and her light shrill laughter could be heard in the piazas and conservatories at almost all times. While her husband was aboard the Marion she took luncheon and dinner with Gower Robinson and went riding with him in his drag."

"Hetherington finally had his eyes opened on New Year's eve at a ball, when he discovered his wife and Robinson in a lover-like attitude in a secluded corner. Robinson left town, but he was indignant enough to write to Mrs. Hetherington some very tender letters, and these she carelessly let fall into her husband's possession. The latter related his double discovery to his captain and brother officers on the Marion and they persuaded him that his honor had been violated and that it might be wiped up upon him by Robinson could only be wiped out by blood."

"The woman's silliness was plainly exemplified by her conduct after the tragedy.
She not only expressed no concern for the occurrence, but actually desired to attend a dinner party given on Saturday evening, the day after the shooting and the day on which Robinson died. On the evening of this day Mrs. Hetherington went to the wife of Admiral Baskin and said:

"Mrs. Baskin, what shall I do about this dinner? You know the Judge (she always called her husband by this title) and I have been invited to the Russian Consul's and, of course, he can't go, because he is in prison, but I don't see how I can get out of going myself. Don't you think I'd better go?"

"Most certainly not," exclaimed Mrs.
Baskin, horrified at such a proposal. "It would be perfectly indecent."

"I don't see why," replied Mrs. Hetherington, tossing her head.

"Then I will explain to you," said Mrs.
Baskin. "Can't you understand that while you and your husband are resting under the cloud of this terrible tragedy it is better that you should keep yourself in the utmost privacy?"

"Why should I? He killed Robinson. I didn't."

"At which Mrs. Baskin says she could not stand such nonsense any longer, but then and there made the foolish woman sit down and write a note of regret.
Mrs. Baskin departed for the dinner, thinking everything was all right. Imagine her horror, when half through dinner, to see the fickle, golden haired beauty, Mrs. Hetherington, come tripping in, clad in white tulle and diamonds, smiling and greeting everyone with pretty speeches. She even remarked to one guest: 'You know the Judge has shot George.'"

"The guests were shocked, and it was as if a wet blanket had fallen over the banquet board. The lady remained there till late, and departed as happy as if nothing had happened to mar her self-satisfied tranquillity."

"Mrs. North's return to Yokohama with Hetherington's permission, given him by telegram. Robinson from Kobe wrote many letters to Hetherington, and received a reply by wire concerning to his return.
Mr. Port, who was a bosom friend of Robinson, was in Kobe searching for this dispatch when the inquest adjourned in order to get his testimony."

"The feeling in Yokohama is bitter against the woman, for even the Americans say she was so reckless in flirtation that no man should have been killed for her sake. The only criticism on Hetherington is that he should have shot Robinson down like a dog."
